Amigo Studios: shared valuation and handover notes

Prepared November 2026 for Austin Faure (75%) and Pat Lang (25%). Confidential: this includes lease terms covered by the lease's confidentiality clause (§9), which allows them to be shared with prospective assignees. Please keep it between the owners, any incoming partners, and your advisors.

This is a working fact base for the two of us. It isn't an appraisal, and it isn't legal or tax advice. Every number traces back to the Mercury records (Mar 4 – Nov 10, 2026), the lease, or the equipment inventory. Where something is an estimate, it's labeled as one.

1. Where the studio stands

Mercury history starts March 4, 2026, so we have 8 months to work from and no prior-year history, which means seasonality can't be judged yet. Figures include podcast services (done-for-you podcast work for clients), which the studio runs alongside room rentals.

Per month (average)	Spring (Mar 4–May 31)	Jun 1–Jul 16	After Jul 17 (to Oct 31)
Room rentals (Stripe, Peerspace, other)	$9,828	$4,135	$4,877
Subtenant ($1,046/mo, used throughout since it continues)	$1,046	$1,046	$1,046
Podcast services	$923	$1,919	$3,499
Total revenue	$11,797	$7,100	$9,422
Running costs (incl. podcast-services crew)	~$6,762	~$6,736	~$7,200
Monthly result, before paying anyone to run it	≈ +$5,035	≈ +$364	≈ +$2,222

Running costs (after Jul 17, per month): rent + CAM + insurance $3,818 · utilities ~$1,000 · studio hosting (Jacob) ~$360 · supplies, software, platform fees, ads and other ~$580 · podcast-services crew ~$1,040 · ~$250 estimated for costs outside Mercury (insurance, tax prep, California $800 LLC tax). One-time items and gear purchases are left out, replaced with a gear allowance (~$150/mo).

What changed: spring was strong, with Austin working about 20 hours a week. June to mid-July was a slow stretch after that strong spring: fewer and smaller room bookings, and several larger spring jobs were one-offs that didn't repeat. Both rooms slowed together. Around July 17 Austin stepped back to about 1 hour a week. Since then room rentals have run about $4.9k a month and podcast services have grown to about $3.5k a month, so the studio makes about +$2.2k a month (~$26.7k a year) before anyone is paid. Most podcast-services work comes from two clients.

Early November: Nov 1–10 brought in $5,161 of studio revenue (Stripe $3,523, Peerspace $1,040, subtenant $598). That's a strong start. A full November, plus prior-year Stripe and Peerspace history, would show whether October was a low point or the new normal.

2. What's being transferred

Equipment and furniture. This leaves out Pat's own podcast rig (cameras, mics, Rodecaster, switcher, and the mic boom). Values are estimates based on typical resale ratios, not actual sold listings, so treat them as ±30%.

Group	New cost	Used value	Quick-sale value
Lighting (MixPanel 150 ×4, MixPanel 60, Forza 500 kit, FS-300 ×3, Godox DP600 ×3, Forza 60B, projector, softboxes)	$12.2k	$6.0k	$3.9k
Modifiers, grip and misc (C-stands ×5, floppies, domes, cart, hazer, green screens, neon sign, racks, steamer, etc.)	$5.8k	$2.4k	$1.5k
Furniture and decor (desks, couches, coffee tables, lounge and office chairs, fridge, cabinets, plants)	$11.4k	$3.8k	$2.3k
Movable total	$29.4k	$12.2k	$7.7k

Furniture is valued from what was actually paid (two of the couches were free). Pat's tube lights are excluded. The strobes, hazer, floppies and green screens belong to the cyclorama studio rental and are included. The makeup station, pony wall and closet shelving are counted in the build-out below, not here.

Build-out (stays with the space): the cyc wall, front-room dividers, the upstairs podcast-studio wall, soundproofing, the custom downstairs office, plus the pony wall, makeup station, closet shelving, slatted divider and shelves, wall panels, kitchenette and pendants. It cost about $60k. It's attached to the building, and under a standard lease it belongs to the landlord when the lease ends, so it has no resale value. What it's worth is the right to keep using it, which lasts only as long as a lease. Walls and soundproofing last far longer than a lease (assume ~15 years, so about $4k a year of use). That's ~$2.2k for the 6.5 months left on the current term. After May 2027 the space and its build-out are the landlord's, and the renewal is what lets the studio keep using them. The value section splits the renewal-term use evenly between seller and buyer: ~$7k for a ~2–3-year renewal, ~$10k for ~4 years, ~$12k for 5 years.

Website and booking system: a custom site and booking system: card-hold booking with team approval, automatic texts and emails (reminders, abandoned-booking recovery, review requests), an admin and crew hub, design-your-set, and ~20 local SEO pages. Rebuilding it would cost roughly $45–150k. Pat and/or his team get full access and use; Austin and the buyers each keep a non-exclusive right to resell or license the booking system to other studios. The site's SEO pages and the studio's own setup are fully the buyers'.

Systems: Stripe, GoHighLevel, Supabase, the Google Ads account, both phone numbers, and the Innago account. Since the studio is being rebranded, the Amigo name isn't used after hand off, and amigostudiosoceanside.com forwards to the new brand so search traffic carries over.

Listings & reputation (built up over about 5 years, included and rebranded):

Listing	Rating
Peerspace, photo/video studio	5.0, 86 reviews, Power Host
Peerspace, podcast studio	5.0, 9 reviews, Power Host
ShareGrid (gear rentals and sales; Austin's personal profile)	94 reviews, 100% positive
Google Business Profile	5.0, 27 reviews

Renaming a listing on the same account keeps its reviews. A new account starts at zero. So their value depends on handing over the accounts themselves, through each platform's own process. Peerspace has brought in about $6–12k a year (~$9.6k over Mar–Oct) from ~2 bookings a month, and at that pace rebuilding 95 reviews would take 4–5 years. The value below is what a new zero-review listing would likely lose in bookings over its first one to two years. ShareGrid covers gear rental rather than studio bookings, and no ShareGrid income runs through the studio account, so it's valued at little or nothing unless the gear-rental side continues. A "formerly Amigo Studios" line on the listings for a few months keeps the older reviews credible.

Subtenant: $1,046/mo through Innago (about 11% of current revenue, covering about 27% of the rent). They're staying. The landlord's consent to the sublease should be written into the new lease.

3. The lease, in plain terms

- Landlord: Live Wire Investments LLC. Premises: 825 South Coast Highway, Oceanside. About 1,750 sq ft. Gross lease.
- Rent: $3,691/mo base + ~$65 CAM + ~$62 insurance = $3,818/mo all-in (≈ $2.18/sq ft). That's roughly in line with asking rents on the S Coast Hwy corridor.
- Ends May 31, 2027. There's no renewal option or rate in the lease, so a renewal has to be negotiated. Past increases have been about 4% a year. A 4% renewal would add about $150/mo; a market-rate renewal (~$2.40/sq ft) about $380/mo.
- Who's on it: three individuals, Jeremiah Idema, Austin Faure and Beau Trembly, jointly. Jeremiah and Beau are past partners who moved out of state around late 2024 and have no stake in the current business. The current LLC isn't named on the lease.
- What that means: the space can't move with the LLC by itself. The handover needs a landlord-approved new lease (or assignment and amendment) to the buyers' entity (Pat and/or his team), combined with the renewal past May 2027, that releases Austin, Jeremiah and Beau. The 2024 First Amendment did exactly this when it released Brandon Gleed, so there's a template. The landlord will likely ask for the new tenant's financials and possibly a guarantee.

4. Value

> ### Expected price for Austin's 75%: ~$32k

The whole studio is worth ~$43k. Pat already owns 25%, so Pat and/or his new partners buy the other 75% (75% × $43k ≈ $32k). Depending on lease length and bookings, the price for the 75% could land between ~$22k and ~$55k.

How the ~$43k studio value adds up (renewal of ~3–5 years, studio kept running):

Piece	Value	Basis
Gear and furniture, in use	$16.5k	Movable equipment and furniture, valued as set up in a working studio (Pat's rig excluded)
Build-out use	$10.2k	~$2.2k to May 2027 + half of ~4 years × ~$4k a year of use on the ~$60k build-out
Listings & reputation	$4.0k	The Peerspace listings' 95 five-star reviews. A brand-new listing would start with none and likely get fewer bookings for its first year or two
Website and booking system	$12.0k	$15k credit for the site, booking system and SEO pages, reduced because the booking system is non-exclusive
Whole studio	$42.7k ≈ $43k
Austin's 75% (× 75%) = the price	$32.0k ≈ $32k

Checked against earnings: since July 17 the studio makes about $26.7k a year before anyone is paid, nearly all of it from podcast services for two clients. Counting that podcast profit at 60% (it depends on those clients staying) gives ~$15k a year; at a typical 2× multiple that's ~$30k, plus the website ($12k) as a separate asset: ~$42k, close to the ~$43k above. The price uses the higher of the two, never both added together.

What moves it within the range:

- Shorter renewal, low-end credits → ~$22k for the 75% (whole studio ~$29k): gear at used value ($12.2k), build-out use $7.2k (2–3 years), listings $3k, website $6.5k.
- Both podcast-services clients stay → ~$55k for the 75% (whole studio ~$74k): the full ~$26.7k a year at 2× ($53k) plus the website at the top of its range ($20.5k). An earn-out on podcast-services revenue fits this case best.

Cost to recreate: ~$155–285k, including the ~$60k build-out and the $45–150k website and booking system. That's what the buyers avoid by not building from scratch; it's a setup cost, not a price.

No minority discount: the 75% sells as one controlling block. Cash and liabilities (card balances, prepaid bookings, taxes) settle separately at closing.

Proposed price: _____

5. Deal-structure options

- Purchase of the 75% interest, or an asset purchase by the buyers' entity (Pat and/or his team). Either works. Since the LLC isn't on the lease, an asset purchase into that entity plus a new lease directly with the landlord may be the simpler route. Worth a quick check with a lawyer and CPA.
- Cash at closing (simplest), or a seller note: part at closing, the rest over 12–18 months with interest, secured by the equipment, once the new lease is signed.
- Earn-out: a capped share of revenue above the after-July-17 baseline (~$9.4k/mo, rooms plus podcast services) for 12 months, measured from Stripe, Peerspace and the bank.
- Referral fee for new work Austin sends later, separate from the price.

6. Next steps and open items

1. Landlord conversation: a new lease or assignment to the buyers' entity past May 31, 2027, at what rent and term, releasing Austin, Jeremiah and Beau. The renewal is expected; this is the paperwork, and its length sets the build-out figure.
2. Revenue history: prior-year Stripe and Peerspace data, a Stripe split of rental vs services, and the full November 2026 numbers.
3. Equipment walk-through: confirm what stays and what belongs to Pat; get real used prices on the larger lights.
4. Costs outside Mercury: insurance, tax prep, the California LLC tax, the three failed ClckPay/SDCCPM payments ($3,930.78; confirm nothing is owed), prepaid bookings, card balances.
5. Subtenant and podcast services: sublease, landlord consent and end date; a handover with each podcast-services client.
6. Transfers: swap the Peerspace shared login's email and payout to the buyers (reviews stay). Then hand over the Google Business Profile, phone numbers, ShareGrid if wanted, Google Ads, Innago, the domain and its redirect to the new brand, and booking-system access with written non-exclusive resale terms.
7. Paperwork: check the operating agreement's buyout terms; do the purchase and lease documents together; get written confirmations from Jeremiah and Beau that they hold no interest.
